The only problem is, Gloria has no idea where they're going since her husband, Paul, wanted to surprise her with the honeymoon location. She is relieved to discover their flight will be landing in sunny Florida. Visions of sprawling, luxurious resorts boasting sandy white beaches and sparkling pools fill Gloria's head. Unfortunately, Paul has a completely different honeymoon location planned.When they arrive at their final destination, not only does Gloria have to come to grips with her disappointment, she has to figure out why one of the first people the newlyweds come across is a dead man. Before the couple can even unpack, unexpected guests arrive and settle in across the street. Can Gloria solve the mystery of the suspicious death and salvage her honeymoon...or will the sun, sand, and suspects prove to be deadly?

Customer Reviews

This 11th entry in The Garden Girls series is, another entry in what may reasonably be considered to have become a 1-star series. The writing is simple yet challenged (paragraphs consist of phrases or sentences such as "Victoria winked"). The plot structure and the character deficiencies, including of the main female protagonist (Gloria), are problematic. A forgiving and very generous reader might even be able to suspend some disbelief and judgments about smug, delusional, forgetful, deceitful, egotistical, ridiculous Gloria -- and the focus on food (and "her mouth watered" and that she places napkins on or in the plate when finished eating, about which we are told repetitively) -- until page 133...and then recognition of descent from the slippery slope of mediocrity to the flagrantly absurd may be unavoidably perceived by some. For example:p. 133 "Still, the thrill of the mystery outweighed her immediate concern for safety" (Gloria is mature, apparently, only in years.)"After all, no one had threatened them...yet. In addition Paul would be there to protect them." (Irresponsibility, egotistical delusional thinking, and the little dependent woman relying on her new husband (to whom she lies about her "investigations.")p. 143 and following: Gloria (the highly flawed Heroine) fractures her leg and that fracture is but an inconvenience for her. When alone she takes "a long, hot bath and was surprised how roomy the tub was. She was careful to keep her leg and the cast out of the water." (Our Gloria must have gymnastic abilities yet unheralded in a series when every movement is mentioned.) Indeed, at p. 146, Gloria --with fractured leg and cast -- "eased onto an end barstool.
